Blackboys

This impressive five-bedroom conversion of a former hay barn, overseen by the designer Jamie Bannon, can be found on a beautiful 5 acre (approx.) site on the edge of the historic Sussex village of Blackboys.

The house is reached via a long, private drive off a quiet country lane. The plot incorporates around 1.5 acres of woodland and borders on open farmland, creating a peaceful and picturesque setting into which the building, with its larch-clad exterior, sits comfortably.

The building is oak-framed, with solid oak flooring throughout. Oak, glass and metal form the primary palette of materials chosen by Bannon to complete the spacious, largely open-plan interior. An oak tread staircase with a metal spine links the two floors of the building, while large glazed bi-fold doors (fitted with solar control glass and integral blinds) open out onto the surrounding deck and gardens beyond.

The ground floor is largely taken up with a spectacular open-plan kitchen / living / dining room. The living area has a 5.1 surround sound and projector system (there is also a Sonos system and integrated CAT 5 cabling throughout). It also has a woodburning stove. The kitchen area features commercial draw and wine fridges, a range of ovens and granite and solid surface worktops. Also on the ground floor, as well as the entrance hall, is a study / bedroom and a utility room fitted with various appliances.

The first floor has two generously-sized bedrooms with en suite bathrooms at either end. They are joined by a corridor detailed with OSB walls. There are two further bedrooms on this floor and a family bathroom. To one side of the main barn building is a three bay oak frame garage with a large space above which would be a suitable for a variety of purposes.

Bannon has focused on the building's sustainability, putting photovoltaic panels on the roof to provide hot water and extensively insulating. As a designer, he has worked with a number of historic and contemporary buildings in Sussex, being nominated for multiple awards and having his work featured in a number of publications.

The house is located in the picturesque rural village of Blackboys. The village has an excellent pub, The Blackboys Inn, a church, a primary school, a café / village shop and a service station. Local shopping can be done at Uckfield or Heathfield, both approximately four miles away. Ten miles away is Lewes, a thriving and popular town with a range of celebrated cultural and dining opportunities. Tunbridge Wells is approximately 16 miles away and Brighton is 19 miles.
