Lowood Court

The Tour

Lowood Court rises high above the quiet, leafy street below. This apartment is positioned on the seventh floor at the top of the building, to which there is both lift and stair access. Replete with original features, it is defined by its impeccable mid-century design and the superb quality of light that flows around its circular plan.

The front door opens to a hallway where there is storage space for coats and shoes; this leads immediately to the wonderful open-plan living and dining area. The heart of the home, the room is bathed in natural light, which streams in through original windows that extend the length of one wall. Framing views over the greenery of the estate below, this expanse of glazing and the apartment's elevated position create a sense of incredible quietude and peace. Dark-stained original timber runs underfoot, in contrast to the white-painted walls. There is plenty of space for separate seating and dining areas; light fittings are by Artemide.

On the opposite side of the plan lies the kitchen. The room is dual aspect, care of large internal windows that allow light to flow in from the living space, towards the window over the sink. White cabinetry provides ample storage, with a gloss finish that adds a contemporary touch yet remains in keeping with the apartment's mid-century charm. Appliances are by Bosch; large-format grey tiles extend across the floor.

Both bedrooms are bright, generous spaces with uninterrupted far-reaching views north towards the City. A sense of quiet retreat pervades, and light floods in through the huge windows. The rooms are arranged in a circular plan so each can be accessed from the living spaces or from a door that connects the two. The main bedroom is painted in the teal shades of 'De Nimes' by Farrow and Ball and has a dark carpet, ensuring a serene sleeping environment, while the second bedroom utilises a lighter palette. Large built-in wardrobes provide an abundance of storage in both rooms.

The recently updated bathroom has the same grey floor tiles as the kitchen, creating a sense of material continuity. White metro tiles clad the walls, and there is a built-in bath.

The apartment has a private garage, and there is unallocated guest parking on the forecourt below.

Outdoor Space

Lowood Court is peacefully situated amongst communal gardens dotted with a variety of mature trees. As with many mid-century estates, the Dulwich Estate was originally planned around the existing woodlands in the area so feels wonderfully sympathetic to its surroundings.
